The Cleveland Amory Black Beauty Ranch is a world-renowned animal sanctuary in Marshall, Texas. With over 1,400 acres, it is home to some of America’s most endangered species, including exotic and native animals. Many of these animals have been rescued from near-death situations such as dart rechargers, biomedical research laboratories, and trophy hunting ranches. Others have been rescued from roadside zoos or were former victims of biomedical research laboratories and trophy hunting. Most of our animals are originally from roadside zoos or were former victims of biomedical research laboratories and trophy hunting. The sanctuary is not a zoo and is not open for regular public visitation. True to Amory’s vision, it is “a place where animals are looked after, not looked at.” In 2004, the board of directors of The Fund for Animals voted unanimously to memorialize its late, great advocate Cleveland Amory. The sanctuary is not a zoo and is not open for regular public visitation. True to Amory’s vision, it is “a place where animals are looked after, not looked at.” In 2004, the board of directors of The Fund for Animals voted unanimously to memorialize its late, great advocate Cleveland Amory. The sanctuary is not a zoo and is not open for regular public visitation. True to Amory’s vision, it is “a place where animals are looked after, not looked at.” In 2004, the board of directors of The Fund for Animals voted unanimously to memorialize its late, great advocate Cleveland Amory.